

Biography

Douglas Gourlay
Senior Manager, Product Marketing, Internet Systems BU
Cisco Systems, Inc.

Douglas Gourlay is the Senior Manager, Product Marketing for Cisco Systems' Internet Services Business Unit. In this capacity, he is responsible for Cisco's Catalyst 6500 Product Line including datacenter, campus, service provider, and wireless solutions, as well as next-generation system development and direction.

Previously, Gourlay was the Senior Manager of the Content Networking Business Unit where he was responsible for developing products for video and content distribution, as well as creating a services infrastructure for content networking. Several key systems were under Gourlay's management including Server and Global Load Balancing IP/TV, and Content Distribution Networks.

Prior to his role in the Content Networking Business Unit, Gourlay was a Consulting Engineer responsible for Cisco's corporate strategy and architectures for supporting the enablement of e-business applications in the enterprise and service provider space. Gourlay directed Cisco's product and system designs for building Internet Datacenter and Enterprise E-Commerce networked systems.

Since joining Cisco in 1998, Gourlay has been instrumental in the creation of the company's development, investment, and architectural strategies combining emerging technologies with core infrastructure.

Before joining Cisco, Gourlay spent several years in the service provider space and as an industry consultant. Gourlay served in the United States Army as an Infantry Officer.
