Mun Kun Cheong

President, Seoul Development Institute

Mun Kun Cheong is President of the Seoul Development Institute (SDI), the comprehensive urban policy research institute established by the Seoul Metropolitan Government in 1992. Throughout its history, the institute has conducted wide-ranging surveys and extensive studies on various urban problems in the areas of urban planning, transportation, environment, regional economy, municipal finance and administration, social welfare, culture, and urban information. Under Cheong's direction, SDI is proud to contribute to urban policy making and medium-to long term development planning by Seoul Metropolitan Government, helping to lead Seoul to a brighter future.

Previously, Cheong was Executive Vice President / Director, Public Policy Research Department, at the Samsung Economic Research Institute, where he was formerly a director of the Macroeconomy Department. He has also been a research fellow with the Korea Economic Research Institute and with the Bank of Korea.

Cheong received a bachelor's degree in English from Hankook University of Foreign Studies. He earned his master's degree and a doctorate in economics from Vanderbilt University.
